10. Significance : This house is significant for its early date, and for its association with the prominent Chiswell family.
 In 1736 Thomas Gatton leased for 99 years, 200 acres of land from Annapolis lawyer, William Cumming. It appears likely that Gatton built a log house which formed the original part of this house. In 1789 another Gatton, Azariah, moved from the farm and sold his leasehold to John Baptist Pierce.
 William and Sarah Chiswell obtained the lease on the property in 1819. Their son, Thomas, bought the property first leased from William Cumming a century earlier. He also purchased additional acreage, increasing the farm to 412 acres.
 In 1830 the C & O Canal was laid through the farm. The resulting flush of well-being is marked by changes in the house which indicate prosperity and good taste.
 The farm remained in the Chiswell family until 1928, and was purchased by the present owners in 1932.
 The current owners restored the house, added to the acreage, and maintain pasture, a varied ecological balance with plantings, ponds and climax forests.

DESCRIBE THE PRESENT AND ORIGINAL (IF KNOWN) PHYSICAL APPEARANCE

This three bay by two bay house is located a considerable distance from River Road.

Built on sandstone foundations, it is a braced frame house sheathed in white clapboards facing south. The house was built in sections; the east two bay, two and a half story section is slightly higher than the west, two story section. The south (front) porch has a shed roof and is supported by four fluted metal columns. The south (front) door is wooden paneled and is surmounted by a four light transom. There is a glass and wooden paneled door on the north elevation.

The east section, first level, has nine-over-six double-hung windows. The remainder of windows in this house are six-over-six double-hung windows. These are flanked by dark green wooden louvered shutters. On the north elevation there is a bay window with multi-paned windows. The east gable has two small four light windows.

The east and west gable roofs are covered by wooden shingles. There are exterior end chimneys at the east and west gable ends. At the west end there is an exterior fireplace and sandstone foundations which mark the dimensions of a log house which is now gone.

The south (front) door opens into a central hallway. An open string, double-run stairway ascends from south to north along the east interior wall of the hallway. This stairway has a simple semi-circular cherry railing and newel post and square balusters. East of the hallway is the living room and west of the hallway is the kitchen.

The floors are random width boards. The living room and hall have plaster over lath walls and ceilings with crown molding. The kitchen walls have exposed the early brick nogging. There are bullseye door surrounds in the hall and dining room and paneled wooden doors. The east fireplace mantle has fluted engaged columns and a bowed fluted horizontal piece beneath the mantle. Many of the original wooden box locks are still to be found in this house. Each has a brass key to open the individual locks.

The original log cabin, which was 15' by 15'9" with a front and back door, was torn down a decade ago. It was attached to the west end of the present house.

BUILDER/ARCHITECT

STATEMENT OF SIGNIFICANCE

The Chiswell House and the tract of land on which it stands, "Preston Marsh" or "Preston March",¹ were among the earliest established in this part of Maryland. The land patent dates from 1734, the earliest part of the house probably from about 1740. The structure is also significant for its association with the Fletchall and Chiswell families.

The land lies about a mile below Edwards Ferry, between the Potomac River and Mount Nebo Road. Cabin Branch forms part of its western boundary.

The original 1230-acre tract called "Preston March" was granted to William Cumming of Annapolis and James Edmonston of Prince George's County.² It comprised 130 acres of an earlier grant called "Edloe's Adventure" and 1100 acres of adjacent vacant land. William Cumming practiced law in Annapolis with Daniel Dulany, was in 1740 appointed Clerk for the Lower House of the General Assembly, and in 1749 became the first member of the Frederick County Bar.³ It is not clear whether he ever resided on the property. Edmonston's interest seems clearly to have been that of an absentee landlord;⁴ he became a Captain in the Colonial Militia and later a Justice for Montgomery County.⁵

In 1736 Cumming leased out 200 acres of his share of "Preston Marsh" to Thomas Gatton, a planter.⁶ The lease was to run for 99 years. It appears likely that Gatton built a dwelling house on the property sometime during the next few years. In 1759 he divided the land into two equal tracts, leasing the northern half to his son Benjamin⁷ and the rest to James Gatton.⁸ At the time of this transfer improvements existed on both tracts; the original part of the present Chiswell house, a small dwelling, stood on the southern section.

It is not known whether James Gatton was, like Benjamin, a son of Thomas Gatton. It seems likely, for the lease was made the year he became 21,⁹ and the property included the family home, which customarily passed to the eldest son. James Gatton died in 1777, leaving his land to his wife and, upon her death, to their son Azariah.¹⁰

In 1789, at the end of the Revolution, Azariah determined to move away from the farm where he was born, perhaps impelled by the infant republic's raging inflation, the collapse of the tobacco market, and the opening of new and richer lands to the west. He therefore sold his leasehold on the 100 acres with its "messuage or tenement" to John Baptist Pierce.¹¹ Pierce and his wife Elizabeth lived on the property for ten years, until his death in 1799. His widow then sold the lease for 15 shillings per acre to Thomas Fletchall.¹²

Chiswell House

It is through Thomas Fletchall, a prosperous farmer who owned the neighboring Mt. Nebo property,¹³ that the Chiswell family gained ownership of the house and surrounding land. Fletchall's daughter Sarah was the wife of William Chiswell. When her father died in 1819 he left her the leasehold on the house and 100 acres, together with an additional 115 1/4 acres of adjacent land.¹⁴

When William and Sarah's son Thomas Chiswell grew up he made a number of additions to the family properties -- first 243 1/4 acres purchased from George W. Peter,¹⁵ then four years later, in 1843, 131 1/2 acres from the Cumming heirs.¹⁶ This latter purchase included the house and acreage first leased from William Cumming more than 100 years earlier. Thus Thomas Chiswell created the entire 412 acre farm that exists today, which is made up of the 131.5 acre purchase from the Cumming heirs, the 115.25 acres left by Thomas Fletchall, and about 165 acres of the purchase from George Peter.

Even in the colonial era the Gatton/Chiswell farm had the advantages of good communications with the outside world, lying as it did on the Potomac and with River Road, one of the area's earliest highways, bisecting the farm. Despite these advantages, however, agriculture provided only a precarious living until after 1830.

In that year a strip of the Chiswell land was condemned to establish the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal,¹⁷ and a new era of agricultural prosperity opened. Wheat and other produce was hauled up River Road to Edwards Ferry, where canal barges took it to market in Georgetown.

The resulting flush of well-being is marked by changes in the house which indicate prosperity and good taste. The structural workmanship is excellent, and the stair rail, which runs all the way up to the attic, and the mantels are unusual in such a small farmhouse. When the house was stripped of its plaster in 1964 it became apparent that originally there had been a simple structure approximately 15 feet by 15 feet 9 inches, with only one room downstairs and probably a loft above. This was later enlarged by lowering the ceiling and putting two bedrooms in the space upstairs, while adding about three feet to the length of the house and building enclosed stairs. At some other date the larger section to the east was built and joined to the smaller, older section to form one house as it is today.

After Thomas Fletchall Chiswell died around 1851, his widow, Mary E. Chiswell, lived in the house until her death in 1873.¹⁸ Like most residents of the Poolesville area, she was an ardent supporter of the South in the Civil War. Raids by armed forces of both sides were frequent, and indications of earthworks dating from this period can still be seen along the part of the old River Road bed which runs through the property.

Attachment Sheet B
Chiswell House

After Mrs. Chiswell's death the property passed through a number of hands but remained in the family until 1928, when it was sold to William M. Trittippoe.¹⁹ It came into the possession of John B. Cochran and John B. Cochran Jr. in 1932.²⁰ In 1974 the Chesapeake and Ohio National Historic Park bought some of the farm acreage, leaving approximately 393 acres.²¹

The Cochran family still (1979) own the farm. Although they do not live there, they make every effort to maintain it well. No timber has been cut since the Cochrans bought the land. Mr. Cochran grew corn and lespedeza for quail cover and hay, and kept a few head of cattle, pigs, chickens and turkeys.

Since John B. Cochran's death in 1959 his son, Carlyle Cochran, has run the farm. In 1964 the Cochrans restored the old house. In 1975 Mrs. Cochran bought 35 acres of adjoining land to add dense wilderness habitat to the varied ecological systems already existing on the farm. Two ponds have been built in recent years, and white pine and tulip. poplar woods have been planted. About one third of the land is wooded. White-tailed deer, bobcats, great horned and barred owls, red-tailed hawks, wood ducks and wild turkeys live in these woods. The cleared land is used mostly for pasture. There is also a small corn field. At present this land supports two horses, a pony, a few chickens, and about 125 head of cattle. Because of the Cochrans' interest in wildlife, only a very limited amount of shooting is permitted. The Potomac Hunt uses the farm occasionally, as Mr. Cochran enjoys fox hunting. Mrs. Becky Keiffer, a whipper-in of the hunt, and her husband Russell Keiffer, a builder, live on the farm with their daughter.

- 1 The name "Preston" refers to the scene of the Jacobite defeat in Lancashire in 1715. Apart from this, the significance of the name is not clear; it may merely refer to the wetlands on parts of the tract. The name is spelled variously in the land records.
